Take 5

Enjoy a moment to yourself, with this issue's brainteaser fun

Nonogram

In this test of logic, use the clues at the edge of the grid to complete the picture hidden within. You can deduce which cells should be filled in, and which left empty, by the numbers at the edge of each row and column, which represent the amount of consecutive filled cells on that line, with at least one blank cell between each group. Think of it as a 'paint-by-numbers' puzzle!

Hint: Start by completing any rows or columns you can be certain of, e.g. where the numbers and minimum empty cells add up to the max line space. Put a cross in the squares you know should be blank to help you keep track.

	0	1	2	3	9	4 3	2 2	1	0
1
2
3
3
2
1
7
5
3

Riddle me this

What tastes better than it smells?

_____

A man rode into town on Wednesday, and left two days later on Wednesday. How?

_____

Which word in the dictionary is spelled incorrectly?

_____

How did you do? Visit the 'Freebies' section on shop.happiful.com to find the answers, and more!

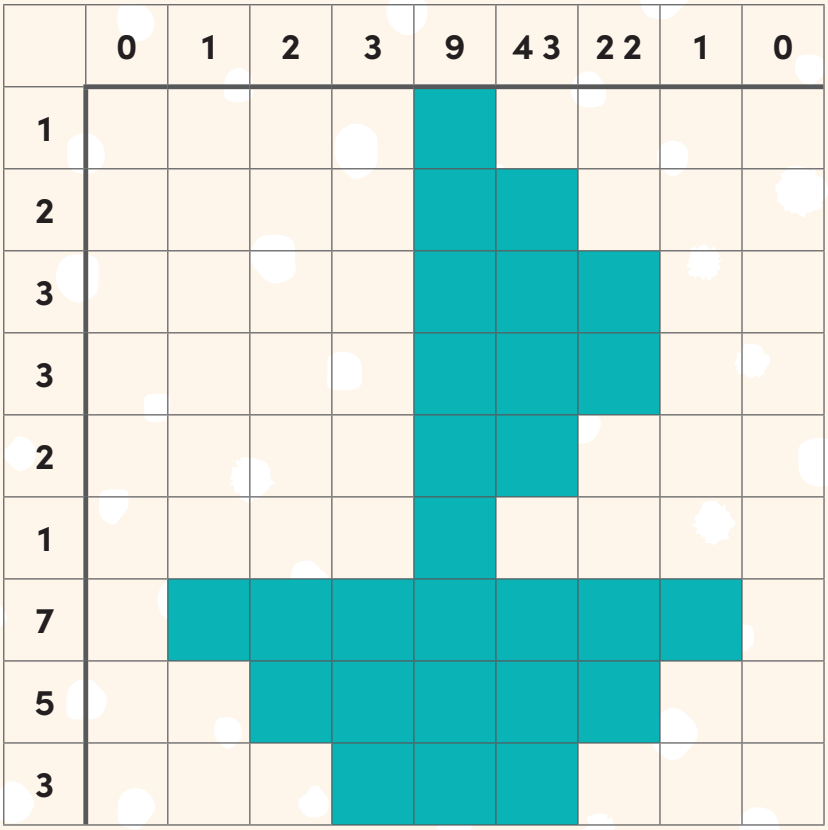
Take 5

Enjoy a moment to yourself, with this issue's brainteaser fun

Nonogram

In this test of logic, use the clues at the edge of the grid to complete the picture hidden within. You can deduce which cells should be filled in, and which left empty, by the numbers at the edge of each row and column, which represent the amount of consecutive filled cells on that line, with at least one blank cell between each group. Think of it as a 'paint-by-numbers' puzzle!

Hint: Start by completing any rows or columns you can be certain of, e.g. where the numbers and minimum empty cells add up to the max line space. Put a cross in the squares you know should be blank to help you keep track.



Riddle me this

What tastes better than it smells?

Your tongue

A man rode into town on Wednesday, and left two days later on Wednesday. How?

The horse's name was Wednesday

Which word in the dictionary is spelled incorrectly?

'Incorrectly'

How did you do? Visit the 'Freebies' section on shop.happiful.com to find the answers, and more!